

August 2009 News Letter from Paul Jensen - Babies and SR

Last week my first grandson, Christopher, who just had his first year birthday came for his first extended visit with grandma and grandpa. Bryan and his wife Whitney were up for a visit from Texas where Bryan is attending law school ... so consequently, we have not had much time to bond with the cute little fellow. Needless to say, Christopher was a bit reluctant to give much attention or let us hold him because we were essentially ... strangers. Well, one morning I found the secret to bonding with my grandson ... and it was Sunrider.

It all happened when I innocently got the Sunectar out to put in my Calli. Christopher was sitting close by and I noticed his eyes locked on the Sunectar like radar. So I walked over and dabbed a little Sunectar on his finger and watched him gobble it up ... and we were best buds. All of a sudden the only place he wanted to be was in my lap getting a constant dose of Sunectar. He loves it.

Since I'm too lazy to make my NuPlus into a drink, I normally just open the package and take it dry. On another day I had Christopher, who I am sure thinks I'm the best grandfather in the world, propped up on the counter as I was opening my NuPlus. Again I got the radar guided laser stare. So we shared a manly meal right out of the package with Christopher insisting on his fair share. I found if I ever wanted his attention, all I had to do was shake my Fortune or Calli drink ... and he would come over for ... what he considered ... HIS drink. Life just does not get better than this. And we have one very healthy grandson.

This reminded me of how good it was as we were raising our own children to have Sunrider to feed them. It makes such a difference. I remember when the kids were first born, I would make a mixture of Calli, Quinary, and Sunectar ... and they would suck it right off my finger ... and they loved it and they responded so well to it.

Now as the last two kids are home, Jared (17) and Anna (14), it is satisfying to see them healthy and wanting to eat better food. In fact, while I was driving Anna to school this morning she was telling me how she was lobbying for less sugar in the house and more fruits and vegetables. (And the sugar is already pretty minimal.) Well, if you are going to have your kids lecturing you ... this is what you want to hear.

After 27 years of eating Sunrider foods and feeding these foods to our children ... I can tell you it is one of the best investments you can make for yourself and your family.

Sincerely,
